1. Of the Anxiety Disorders, Generalized Anxiety Disorder (GAD) has been found to have the highest comorbidity rates. In terms of Anxiety Disorders, results of the National Comorbidity Survey Replication indicate that the most common co-diagnosis for GAD is:

   a. Obsessive-Compulsive Disorder
   b. Posttraumatic Stress Disorder
   c. Social Phobia.
   d. Separation Anxiety Disorder

2. Which of the following is true about gender differences in newborns?

   a. Newborn girls have higher morbidity and mortality rates than do newborn boys.
   b. Newborn boys have higher morbidity and mortality rates than do newborn girls.
   c. Newborn girls and boys have similar morbidity and mortality rates.
   d. Newborn girls have higher mortality rates, but newborn boys have higher morbidity rates.

3. The three overlapping stages of Meichenbaum’s stress inoculation training are:

   a. Formulation, problem focus, and termination.
   b. Self-monitoring, self-evaluation, and self-reinforcement.
   c. Cognitive modeling, overt instruction, and covert instruction.
   d. Conceptualization, skills acquisition, and application.

4. Open-ended questions, affirmations, reflective listening, and summary statements are considered the principle skills or strategies of:

   a. Solution-focused therapy
   b. Reality therapy
   c. Motivational interviewing
   d. Interpersonal therapy

5. Which of the following techniques would be appropriate for using scores on measures of self-esteem, hopelessness, and perceived social support to classify adolescents as either non-depressed, vulnerable to depression, or depressed?

   a. Linear regression analysis
   b. Multiple regression analysis
   c. Multiple discriminant function analysis
   d. Principal components analysis

For detailed rationales to these answers, visit www.aatbs.com/sample/eppp

Answers 1.c  2.b  3.d  4.c  5.c